

SafetyLine Could Save Your Life

Recently a utility company reported that SafetyLine was instrumental in locating a worker who had been hurt and immobilized while working alone. A meter-reader was doing a route which included a building where the meter was behind the building and down a flight of stairs. The meter reader had been to this location many times before and expected the stairs to be there. The stairs had recently been removed and the worker fell in to the stairwell. The worker was incapacitated and could not call for help. SafetyLine alerted the meter reader's supervisor to the emergency. SafetyLine was able to tell the supervisor the meter reader's last location. This information was instrumental in finding the worker and providing aid.
